UNIT 11—ARCHAIC HOMO IN EUROPE

Slide 1

Title slide.

Slide 2

In this unit we are going to look at the earliest humans to make their way into Europe. These include a wide range of fossils that have, over the years, been variously classified as Homo erectus, Homo heidelbergensis, Homo steinheimensis, and several other, now basically defunct, species classifications. Because of this range of variability and variety of classifications, for simplicity sake, researchers use the catch-all term "Archaic Homo" to refer to all these fossils as a group. Some researchers also include Neandertals in the category Archaic Homo, but we will be dealing with them on their own in the next unit.

Slide 3

Before we move onto these early European homins, let's do a quick review:

- We have the emergence of our own genus, Homo, in Africa about 2.5 million years ago currently represented by Homo habilis and Homo rudolfensis.
- Then we have the appearance of Homo ergaster, the African version of Homo erectus, around, or just after, 2 million years ago.
- Around this same time we have Homo erectus, Homo ergaster, or a closely related species, leaving Africa and beginning to spread out into the rest of the Old World, with Dmanisi being the earliest evidence of this discovered so far.
- Some version of Homo erectus then arrives in Asia sometime between 2 million years ago and 1 million years ago.
